

How to get the most out of the Student Education Innovation Slack group

The purpose of the group is to provide a place for students from across schools at Harvard to network, get connected with resources, and share interesting ideas.

Getting started

- Join slack by clicking on the link here and following the steps.
- Click on “Channels” and browse the different conversations in the group. Join channels you are interested in. A couple of important channels:
 - The “General” channel is open to all members and is a place to share interesting articles and ideas.
 - The “Seeking” channel is the best place for you to find help, teammates or a team to join.

Using Slack

- Get communicating! Share links (to google documents and articles) or attach files.
- If you would like to flag a post for a particular person type @[their name] and they will get a notification.
 - To set up notifications preferences (e.g. to automatically snooze overnight), see here.
- If you would like to make a comment about an article that has been shared or respond to a post, you can start a thread to keep the conversation together.
 - Hover over the thing you would like to comment on and a row of icons will appear, click the speech bubble, second from the right to open a thread.
